

Growing Distrust of the Local Press in the Time of Trump

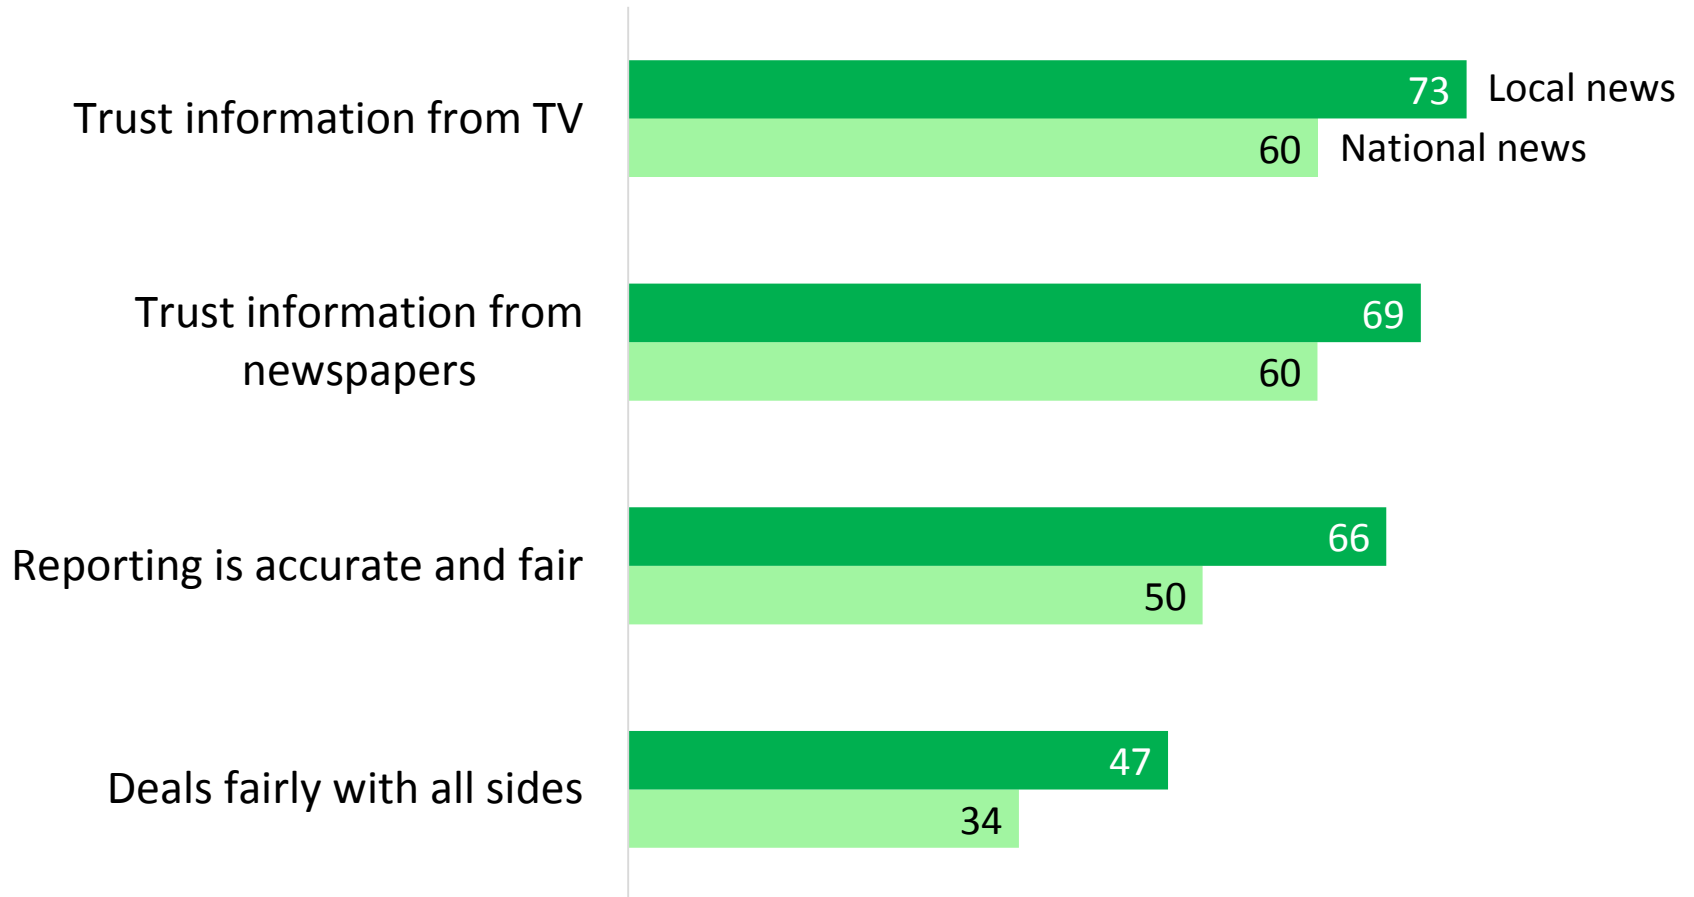

---

Danny Hayes
Department of Political Science
George Washington University
dwh@gwu.edu

Jennifer L. Lawless
Department of Government
American University
lawless@american.edu

Trust in the local media remains higher than trust in the national media

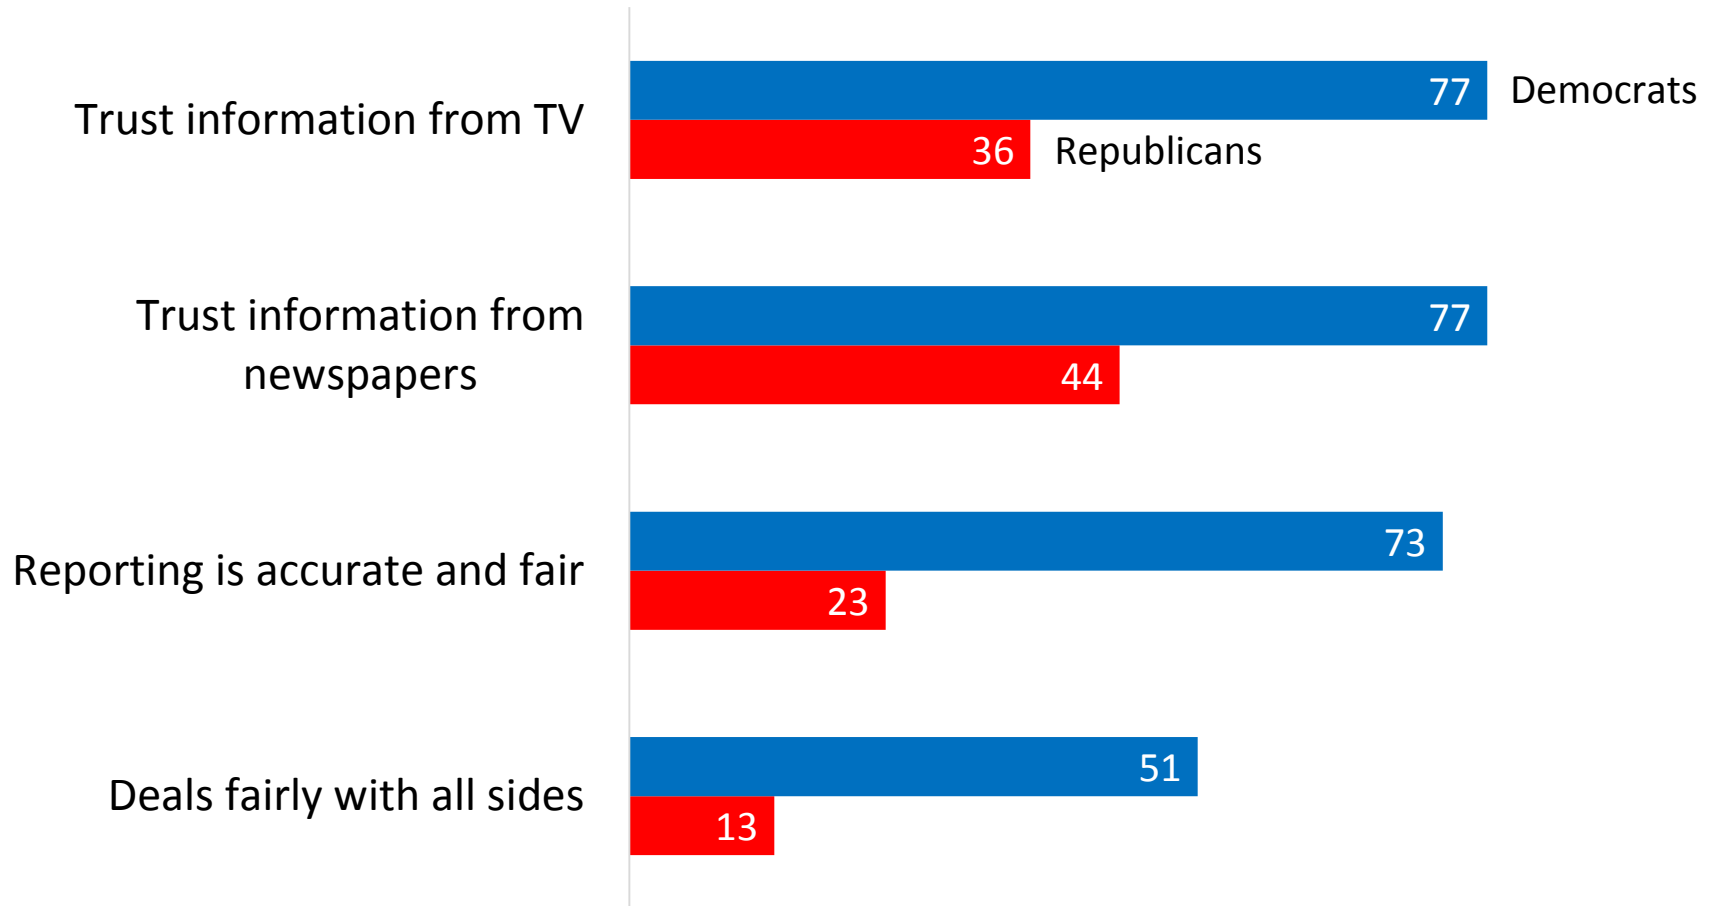

---

Data come from the 2017 Cooperative Congressional Election Study. Figures represent percentage of respondents giving positive response.

Democrats express far more trust in the national media than Republicans do

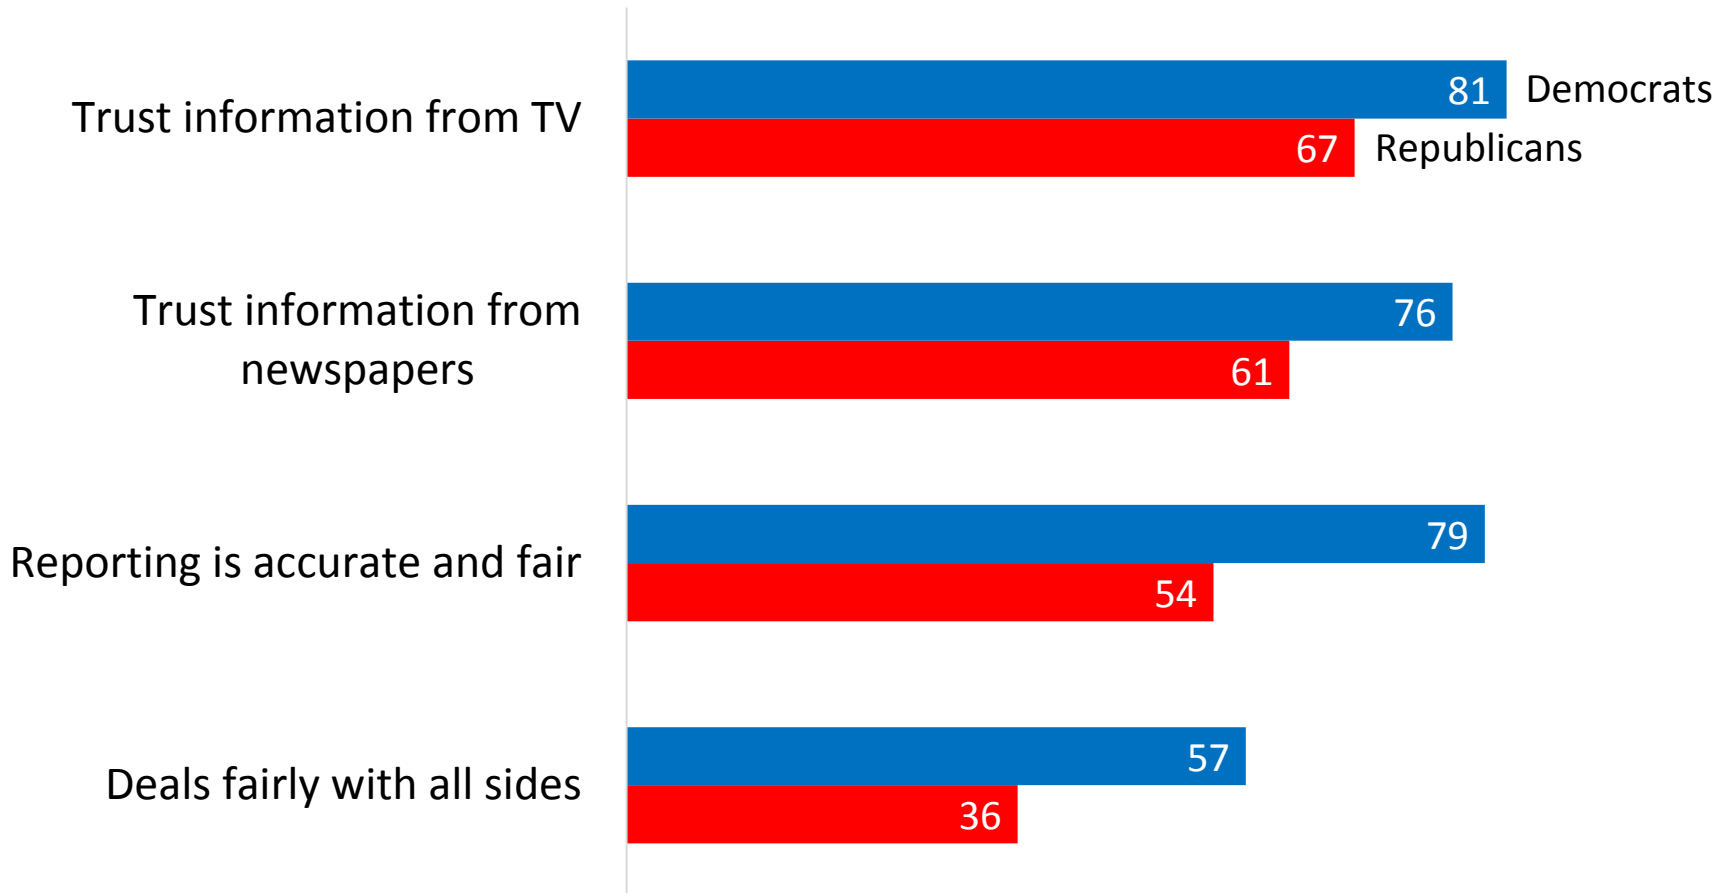

---

Data come from the 2017 Cooperative Congressional Election Study. Figures represent percentage of respondents giving positive response.

The partisan gap is smaller for local media, but Democrats express more trust than Republicans

---

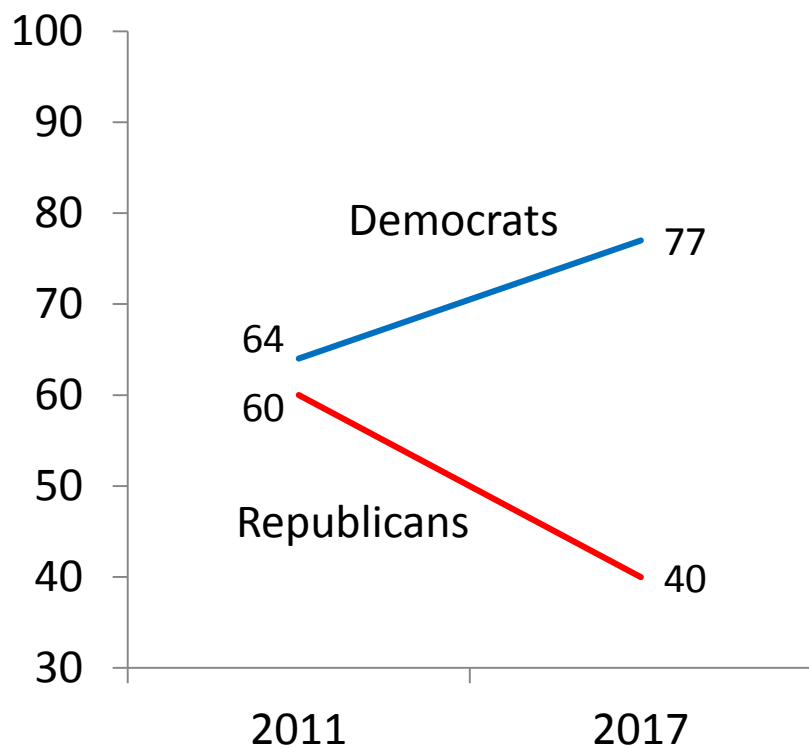

Data come from the 2017 Cooperative Congressional Election Study. Figures represent percentage of respondents giving positive response.

Partisans' attitudes toward local news look more and more like attitudes toward national news

---

Percent Trusting National News

Percent Trusting Local News

Data come from Pew Research Center (2011) and the Cooperative Congressional Election Study (2017).

Trump approval correlates with media attitudes: Strong supporters are very distrustful

---

Data come from the 2017 Cooperative Congressional Election Study. Figures represent the number of positive responses to four questions about media trust and fairness.

Growing Distrust of the Local Press in the Time of Trump

---

Danny Hayes
Department of Political Science
George Washington University
dwh@gwu.edu

Jennifer L. Lawless
Department of Government
American University
lawless@american.edu